The Short Version

We've spent the last few weeks rebuilding how your website is found on Google — and, increasingly, how it gets recommended by AI tools like ChatGPT.

Instead of fighting Tiffany, Kay, Zales, Amazon, and Etsy for a generic term like "custom jewelry" (a fight a smaller brand simply can't win), we've pointed your whole site at a focused, emotional, winnable niche:

▮ Jewelry redesign — taking the old, inherited, and unworn pieces people already own and bringing them back to life.

This document explains, in plain English:

1. The strategy — what “capturing organic traffic” means and why we chose this angle.
 2. What we actually changed on your site.
 3. What we need from you to keep the momentum going — including the photos.

Part 1 — The Strategy: “Capturing Organic Traffic”

What “organic traffic” means

There are two ways people land on your website:

- Paid traffic — you pay for an ad, someone clicks, you stop paying, the visitors stop.
- Organic traffic — someone types a question into Google (or asks ChatGPT), and your site shows up for free because Google decided your page is the best answer.

Organic traffic is the goal. It compounds. A page that ranks keeps bringing in customers month after month without you paying per click. The whole point of this project is to build a steady stream of free, high-intent visitors — people who are actively looking for exactly what you do.

Why we picked “jewelry redesign” instead of “custom jewelry”

We pulled real Google search data. Here’s what it showed:

- On generic terms like “custom jewelry,” the search results are owned by national giants with enormous budgets. Your site, today, gets roughly 8 visitors a month from Google and ranks for only 9 search terms — none of them on page one. We cannot out-muscle Tiffany head-on.
- But there’s a quieter, emotionally charged niche with about 3,500–5,000 searches a month that the giants largely ignore: people searching “reset my diamond,” “redesign engagement ring,” “what to do with my grandmother’s ring,” “repurpose old jewelry.”
- The sites currently winning those searches are independent designers — not national chains. That means they’re beatable.
- And it’s a perfect fit for your business: the people searching are overwhelmingly women 45–70 who own inherited jewelry, have the means to commission a redesign, and care about story and craftsmanship over a brand name on a box. They often supply their own gold and stones, which makes the work higher-margin — and the whole thing can be done by mail, so you never have to publish a studio address.

So the strategy in one sentence:

Own the jewelry-redesign niche — emotionally and on Google — and become the place people go when they have a piece they love but never wear.

The “AI search” angle (this is newer, and a real edge)

People increasingly ask ChatGPT, Perplexity, and Google’s AI things like “what should I do with my late mother’s ring?” The redesign niche is exactly the kind of question-and-answer territory AI loves to summarize. We’ve structured your new content to be clearly quotable and machine-readable, so your site has a real shot at being cited by AI — something the big chains aren’t optimizing for yet.

Part 2 — What We Actually Changed

Everything below is already live on your site. Think of it in three buckets: a new content hub, fixes under the hood, and the strategic groundwork.

A) A whole new “Jewelry Redesign” section (8 new pages, all live)

We built a connected cluster of pages — a central hub plus supporting pages that all link to each other (this internal linking is itself a ranking signal).

The hub page — lorinczi.com/pages/jewelry-redesign

- A proper headline (“Jewelry Redesign — Bring Your Gems & Jewelry Back to Life”)
- Expanded, search-optimized content explaining the process, what can be redesigned, refining old gold, sustainability, and sentiment
- A frequently-asked-questions section (cost, timeline, is it safe to mail jewelry, insurance) — written so Google can display it directly in search results
- A spot reserved for a before/after gallery (this is one of the things we need from you — see Part 3)

Three focused service pages, each targeting a specific high-value search:

- </pages/reset-diamond-ring> → “ring resetting” / “reset diamond ring”
- </pages/redesign-engagement-ring> → “redesign engagement ring”
- </pages/heirloom-jewelry-redesign> → “heirloom jewelry redesign”

Four blog posts, written to capture top-of-funnel searches and build trust:

1. What to Do With Old or Inherited Jewelry
2. How to Repurpose Old Jewelry Into Something You'll Wear
3. Jewelry Redesign Before & After (a visual/story piece)
4. Resetting a Diamond: What to Know

We also wrote “The Jewelry Redesign Guide” — a polished, downloadable PDF you can offer as a free download in exchange for an email address. It's ready to use as a lead magnet.

B) Technical fixes under the hood (invisible to visitors, important to Google)

These are the kinds of things that quietly hold a site back. We fixed:

- Duplicate page descriptions sitewide. Google penalizes pages that all describe themselves the same way. We forced unique, keyword-rich descriptions on the homepage, the collections, and across the site — and wrote 23 unique descriptions for your product collections (rings, necklaces, engagement rings, etc.).
- Page titles. Rewrote the homepage title, shortened over-long product titles, and fixed a formatting bug that was breaking titles.
- The homepage had two competing main headings — confusing to Google. Fixed to one clear headline.
- Missing image descriptions (alt text). For a visual, before/after brand this matters a lot — both for Google Images and accessibility. Added a sitewide fallback so no product image is left undescribed.
- Structured data (“schema”). This is hidden code that tells Google and AI engines what your pages are — a product, an FAQ, a how-to, your business, you as a person. We added the full set (Website, Organization, Person, Product, FAQ, How-To, Breadcrumbs, item lists). This is what makes star ratings, FAQ drop-downs, and AI citations possible.

C) The strategic playbook (documents prepared for you)

Alongside the site work, we built the roadmap:

- The full SEO & AI strategy — keyword research, site architecture, the 12-month plan, and KPIs.
- A competitor teardown — we reverse-engineered the niche leader (Melanie Casey) and a key rival (Elora Lab) so we know exactly what to copy and where we can beat them. (Short version: they win on backlinks/authority, not on better pages — so building links is our highest-leverage next move.)
- A link-building & PR campaign plan — the 7 ways to earn the backlinks that are currently the single biggest ceiling on your rankings, with ready-to-send outreach email templates.

What We've Done for Lorinci

- A live visibility dashboard — a one-page snapshot of where you rank now, so we can watch the numbers climb month over month.

Part 3 — What We Need From You

This is the important part. The foundation is built; now it needs real photos, a few accounts set up, and your relationships. Here's the priority list.

1. Photos — the single biggest thing we need ★

Your new pages have spaces reserved for images, but we can't fabricate your work. To finish the redesign hub and the blog, we need:

What we need	Where it goes	Why it matters
Before & after photos of real redesign projects (the old piece next to the finished one)	The hub's before/after gallery + the Before & After blog post	This is the most persuasive content you have. Nothing sells a redesign like seeing one.
A few process / in-progress shots (sketches, gold being refined, a piece on the bench)	The service pages & blog posts	Builds trust and shows the craft.
2–3 photos per blog post (a finished piece, a styled shot, anything relevant)	The four new blog posts	Posts with images rank better and feel finished.
Headshot / studio photo of you	Hub + "about" context	Helps Google and AI recognize "Stacey Lorinczi" as a real person and authority.

Don't worry about perfection — natural light and a few angles on your phone is genuinely fine. Quantity and authenticity beat polish.

2. Testimonials & client stories

Even 3–5 short quotes from past redesign clients (especially heirloom/sentimental stories) would let us add a testimonials section — a proven trust-builder the niche leader uses heavily.

3. Two accounts to set up (free, ~30 minutes)

- Google Search Console + Google Analytics (GA4) — these let us see the real searches your new pages start earning and prove the traffic is growing. This is the foundation for everything we measure.
- A Google Business Profile (set up as a "service-area" business so your home address stays private) — this is how you capture "jewelry redesign near me" searches in the Bay Area. We'll guide you through both.

4. Google reviews from past clients

Reviews are the #1 lever for showing up in local "near me" results — and they build trust everywhere. A quick ask to happy past clients goes a long way.

5. The relationships only you can open (backlinks)

Backlinks — other reputable sites linking to yours — are currently the biggest thing holding rankings back. We've written the email templates and built the target list; what we need from you is the go-ahead and the introductions:

- "Best jewelry redesign" roundup articles (we find them, you're the name behind the pitch)
- Local partners: estate attorneys, wedding planners, antique dealers (heirloom referral sources)
- Press/"meet the maker" features in SF lifestyle and design press

What Happens Next (and When)

Google typically takes 2–6 weeks to re-crawl and start ranking new content, and authority builds over months — so this is a marathon, not a switch we flip. Here's the realistic trajectory we're aiming for:

Metric	Today (baseline)	6-month target	12-month target
Organic visitors / month	~8	150	500+
Search terms you rank for	9	100+	300+
Page-1 rankings in the redesign niche	0	5	15
Redesign consultation requests / month	—	10	30

This month's priorities: get the photos, set up Search Console + Analytics + Google Business Profile, and begin the first round of backlink outreach.

The hard architectural work is done. The site is now built to be found. The next chapter is mostly about feeding it your real work (photos, stories, reviews) and earning the links — and that's where we need you.

Questions about anything here? Every item above maps to a detailed working document in your project folder — happy to walk through any of it.
